Chancellor Hogan Hears Students Concerns

Sarah E. White
Staff Writer

Chancellor Hogan held another open meeting for students and faculty in the Cumnock Hall Trustees' Room on February 23 from 3:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. There were ten students in attendance, plus Dean Leo King, the Vice Chancellor for University Life.

Issues such as parking, car thefts, the new arena, and the upkeep and modernization of certain classrooms on campus were discussed.

Once again, Chancellor Hogan acknowledged the high rate of car theft on campus. He is proposing that surveillance cameras be put up in the parking lots along with the possibility of gates on the lots. The gates would be specialized so that vehicles could only get into the lots with a computerized card.

In discussing the issue of parking, one student brought up the fact that the Marginal parking lot's gates are not opening up early enough. Chancellor Hogan said he would address the issue.

The attainment of the Vulcor lot was also discussed. Once again Hogan said that the lot will be available by summer, and in use in September.

The issue of modernizing certain classrooms was brought up by a student. In Mahoney Hall, there are large lectures being held but, unfortunately there is a problem with the acoustics. There isn't a microphone available for the professors to use and therefore not good for classroom learning. Some classes in Mahoney Hall need audio visual equipment, but it is very difficult to use in the auditorium. Hogan acknowledged these facts and stated that he is going to start a "campaign to modernize certain rooms and buildings on campus this summer."

The issue of the movement of the bookstore was also brought up by a student. The bookstore would move from on campus to downtown Lowell. This move would make the City of Lowell and the University, not two separate communities but one. The Chancellor stated that he would like the bookstore to be "safe and welcoming" to all students. A complex in which the students could relax and socialize in is an ideal for Hogan.

A last issue brought up by students was the arena. Chancellor Hogan agrees that we are in need of a new arena and is trying to arrange a joint venture with the City of Lowell. At a recent press conference attended by Chancellor Hogan concerning the arena, he discovered that it "may be possible for the city to raise the amount needed, but the city is not sure."

If you have any issues you would like to address, the next open meeting with Chancellor Hogan will be on March 9 in McGauvran 334 at 3:00 p.m.

UML Student Shot

Martin O'Shaughnessy
Staff Writer

U-Mass Lowell student, Jamey Beland was shot Friday February 18 while he and a friend, Peter Kapoulakis were walking to a fraternity house on Plymouth Street. Witnesses state that the shooting occurred when Beland and a friend passed a brawl near North Campus.

Jamey Beland was first taken to Lowell General hospital and later airlifted to University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester where he is listed in fair condition with a bullet lodged in his spine. Beland's father said that early tests indicate no paralysis, but doctors say it is still too early to determine if Beland will be paralyzed.

The shooting occurred as Beland and Kapoulakis were walking to the Sigma Phi Omnicron fraternity house at 30 Plymouth St. Kapoulakis said there was a fight about 11 p.m. on Plymouth St. about 50 yards from the party. As Beland walked past the fight, one of the fighters ran to a car in the Plymouth St. parking lot and got a handgun. The man fired one shot in the air and turned and fired at least one shot at Beland, Kapoulakis said. Beland was shot once in the chest with a small caliber handgun. The police have not recovered the weapon and are uncertain of the caliber because the slug is still in Beland's spine.

The assailant then jumped into a dark black Toyota Supra and fled the scene. Police arrested Manuel Renard Hardin Sunday and charged him with armed assault with intent to murder and unlawfully carrying a firearm. At his arraignment at Lowell District Court on Tuesday Hardin pleaded not guilty and is being held in lieu of $200,000 cash bail or $2 million surety.

Assistant District Attorney Richard Grundy said at Hardin's Arraignment Tuesday that Hardin arrived at Friday night's fraternity party at Sigma Phi Omnicron about 10:30 looking to get even with a particular unnamed individual. Police said that someone roughed up Hardin's girlfriend about two weeks ago at a party on Plymouth St. Grundy said there was an altercation between Hardin and his friends and another group of young men moments before the shooting.

Details concerning Beland's involvement in this altercation are unclear. Grundy did not say if Beland was involved in the altercation, but acting Lowell Police Superintendent Ed Davis thinks Beland may have been involved in a shoving match with Hardin. Capt. Garrett Sheehan, who heads the Lowell Police Criminal Investigations Bureau, said that Beland was not involved in the altercation with Hardin's girlfriend. Sheehan also said that Beland and Hardin did not know each other before the incident.

How this shooting incident will impact the University and Campus Police is still uncertain. What is certain is the University Administration's concern for Beland's health and his ability to keep up with his course load. When asked to comment for the University on the incident, Dr Sperounis, Vice President for University Relations and Development said that it is terrible and tragic that such an event will happen to a student. This is an horrific act. He went on further to say that the University's principle responsibility is to the welfare of the student and are working to insure that he is able to maintain his course work load.

Proposed site of new UML arena and Rec. Center

Going, going ...

Hopes for an on-campus arena begin to fade

Philip Kelnhofer
Staff Writer

Last Wednesday, February 23, the tentative plan for the new UMass Lowell arena was unveiled. Proponents of the Lowell Plan, the group which hopes to revitalize Downtown Lowell, announced that an eight thousand seat multi-purpose stadium we be built next to the Lowell Post Office, approximately one mile from Fox Hall.

The arena will be ideal for concerts and events too large to fit in the Lowell Memorial Auditorium and too small for larger area arenas such as Boston Garden and the Worcester Centrum. The new arena would replace the Joe Tully Forum as the home of UMass Lowell Hockey and replace Costello Gymnasium as a site for both basketball teams.

The plan also includes a new recreation center for UMass Lowell students. This will be built where the Research Foundation now stands. The center will house facilities much like those now in Costello Gymnasium, but they would be larger and more accessible to students.

The total cost for the new buildings will be $45 million. Since they will be built as a joint venture with UMass Lowell, the City of Lowell, and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, each will pay one-third of the final bill. While UMass Lowell and the Commonwealth both have the money already put aside, the city has yet to come up with the funds. Despite fiscal problems, the project is expected to be completed in two years.

The decision to build off-campus was made despite the efforts of the students and athletes to keep the arena on campus.

Both University administrators and City officials hope the venture will help relations between the school and the city. However, reactions by students have been lukewarm, especially after recent attempts to move the University bookstore downtown.

In typically bewildering UMass Lowellian form, it seems painfully obvious that the administration here at Disney Land is hell bent on selling its flimsy soul to the City of Lowell. For no obvious benefit to the university, plans exist to locate a proposed sports arena and worse, the campus bookstore, in the downtown Lowell area. Why?

In the case of the arena, if having it off-campus is the only way to do it, fine. It's that important.

Concerning the bookstore, to put it downtown would be another in a long line of slaps to the faces of students who deserve better. Right now we have North, South, West, and Middle (Fox) campuses. We don't need or want another. But check this out.

The ideal, and very plausible, solution, would be to combine both the new arena and a new bookstore with a student center at one centrally located site--namely, where the research foundation now sits. This plan, in some form or another, has been proposed sometime in the past. Where is it now?

Imagine a modern, practical facility, housing our bookstore, a dining center, recreation room and sports arena located right on campus. Not only would it be a big recruiting tool, but it would actually serve, and serve well, students.

If financing is a problem, as it surely would be, think corporate. We already have it with Barnes and Noble owning the rights to our book sales. Get them (or someone else) to come up with some reasonable percentage in return for their name on the building (the B and N Center...think about it!) and a nice, new store with a record department, greeting card section, print shop...you name it. We're talkin' bucks here.

Pushing either or downtown is only selling out to the city and its business interests anyway, and exploiting the students in the process. Constructing a catch-all facility on-campus would grant this university some of what its administration so desperately craves: respect.

But why the school has to vie with the city for prestige is still a mystery. Sure, it's a great town. At least I think so. Still, there's no reason to build-up the university around the city. If anything, the city should be rallying around the school. I once heard a student remark, "the only thing keeping this city from being Lawrence is this school." Hey, not so fast. At least Lawrence has a decent movie theater.

So what can be done? Probably nothing. A concerted voice is needed and frankly, most of us don't have the time or energy to fight a wholly unresponsive administration. So, barring a massive outpouring of dissent (or support) from the student body, the university will serve itself, as it is sadly wont to do.

Otherwise, you could join token forces with the Student Government Association, with their magic markers and flaccid rhetoric. This organization has all the authority of Cindy Loo Who confronting the Grinch. After another cup of water and a pat on the head, the administration will simply do what it wants.

After that, the SGA, will take credit if it goes their way and gripe and moan some more if it doesn't. They talk a good game, but lack authority. They look good on paper, but have no legitimacy on campus because nobody votes for them. Nobody votes at all. Nobody cares because nobody never sees nothing these nobodies never do.

Some of this bilious attack, though true, may be reasonably attributed to the personal attack, I who never name names, was subjected to via "the SGA page," which, well, speaks meekly for itself. But I'm not about to start some wasteful war of words. Instead, I will accentuate the positive, which is, in his obtuse, pathetic, I-wish-I-had-a-creative-impulse, sophomoric, self-glorifying little article titled "The Mascot," Shawn Ward makes a very good point--that next to Rush Limbaugh, even he looks good.

The next time Shawn Ward has the impulse to put his frighteningly ignorant thoughts to paper, he should stay in the bathroom with his slick palm and National Review back issues.

And this to my other grappling-with-anonymity attacker, the brain with a pen responsible for tacking an unsigned editorial massacre of one of my columns to the first floor O'Leary Library bulletin board: I have taken a few English courses, learning, in addition to many other wonderful concepts, that of pragmatism. Check it out.

And, lest I forget, the university once again weathered the latest outbreak of unkind precipitation (last Thursday) with a typically lame gesture on our behalf. The astounding Math Perspectives dynamo of a course teaches a segment on management science, just in case anyone is interested. I don't think we'd mind if certain members of the administration sat in from time to time. Or, go to O'Leary, where the video series "For All Practical Purposes" is on reserve. There's this really cool part where they discuss how to accomplish municipal-type tasks in efficient-like ways. Take a look-see. Just get there before 11 p.m.

Honesty Is Way Of Life At Memphis College

By College Press Service

MEMPHIS, Tenn. - Honesty is not just the best policy at Rhodes College, it's the only policy.

At Rhodes, which is considered to have one of the toughest honor code systems in the nation, it is assumed that students do not lie, cheat or steal.

Students who eat lunch in the cafeteria can carelessly drop backpacks on the floor with certainty that nothing will happen to their possessions. No one checks to see if they have paid for their meals. Professors leave classrooms unattended during tests. Examinations are left on computer programs that are easily accessible to students, and if a student elects to take a test early, it is expected that he or she will not divulge any of the questions.

"It gives students a sense of control over their environment," said Chris Campbell, president of the Student Honor Council, which investigates alleged infractions of the code. "Students have more at stake in what's going on in the classroom. If one student cheats and the professor happens to grade on a curve, that affects the others in the class. It's fairer for students to be judged by their peers.

All first-year students told that they have to sign a pledge not to cheat, steal or lie and to report anyone who does. New students walk up, one by one, and sign their names in a large leather volume that is the honor code book itself and pledge to live up to the standards of community life at Rhodes College.

"These standards, by which we all agreed to live, protect our personal freedom by encouraging a climate of trust, concern and respect conducive to learning and growing," the pledge reads in part.

The Honor Council is tough on violators. About half of the students hauled before the student-run council were turned in by other students. In the past five years, the council has placed 47 students on probation, suspended 16 and expelled seven.

All reports of violations are brought before the council, which investigates the incident. If it is determined that an infraction has been committed, the council convenes a hearing in which the student is either exonerated, placed on probation, suspended or expelled. There is an appeal panel of faculty and administrators which can uphold the decision or recommend a different course of action. But the council's ruling stands virtually in all cases.

That has brought the Honor Council some criticism as being arbitrary in its judgments. Some critics have expressed concern that the student council members aren't experienced enough to investigate a violation or deal with sensitive areas of conduct. Others complain that the council members shouldn't be elected because it turns the process into a popularity contest.

Campbell said the secretiveness of the council has come under fire because members meet at night and the name of the accused is never made public. "Our secretiveness is to protect the character of the person accused," he said. "It's not like we wear cloaks and carry torches."

Faculty members said they were generally pleased with the results of the honor code.

"I leave my purse in my office in plain sight and don't lock my office door when I am on campus," said Dee Birnbaum, professor of economics.

However, as she points out, the honesty of students, faculty and staff at the college tends to lull them into a false sense of security.

"The worst part about the honor code, for me, is that I have become too relaxed about looking after my property," she said. "The problem is that I'm afraid that I'm losing that paranoid edge that permits me to survive in other places like New York."

Milton Brown, professor of religious studies, said he likes the message that the system conveys to students. The honor code, he said, "encourages authenticity, being accountable for oneself in the context of a true community of responsible selves, having a sense of interdependence that fosters and expects the best in others."

University Sabbaticals Come Under Fire

By Janet Singleton
Special Correspondent
College Press Service

The case of a Colorado university administrator who wanted to take an eight-month sabbatical to study Shakespeare has spared a movement to regulate paid leaves of absence that professors and university officials are granted to conduct research projects.

Merrill Lessley had intended to take an eight-month leave while still drawing $7,600 a month pay as vice chancellor of academic affairs at the University of Colorado at Colorado Springs. However, the arrangement received heavy criticism after newspaper reports brought it to light.

"What on earth does the University of Colorado think it is doing by granting paid vacations of six to eight months ... for administrators? questioned an editorial in Denver's Rocky Mountain News.

At a time of budget cuts in higher education, state universities can't afford to be so generous with university officials or professors, the newspaper editorial said.

A group of Colorado politicians agreed, and state Rep. Tony Grampsas, R-Golden, introduced a bill to impose guidelines on the granting of paid sabbaticals.

"Some universities are giving sabbaticals under confidential conditions. Why should it be confidential, when the public is paying for it?" Grampsas asked.

Before legislators could take action on the bill, however, the University of Colorado Board of Regents moved late last year to freeze paid administrative leaves. In January, the board abolished administrative sabbaticals altogether and is looking at ways to restrict paid leaves to faculty at its four campuses.

Lessley, who since has left the Colorado Springs campus and is teaching an art class at the UC-Boulder campus and a senior seminar at UC-Denver, said the situation was more complicated than the newspaper reports indicated. He also said his departure was not prompted by the publicity.

At the time of the sabbatical request last semester, Lessley said he was still a member of the faculty even though he was serving as vice chancellor. He had not taught for 12 years before he decided to take the leave.

"First of all, it was not a sabbatical. It was an administrative leave," Lessley said, declining to comment on what difference exists between the two. "I felt that, after being out of the classroom, it would be really helpful to get my research stream back up again."

Although he feels his planned leave of absence was taken out of context, the 52-year-old Lessley said he harbors no ill will. "That's life, so I hold no hard feelings," he said.

Grampsas' legislation (House Bill 1050 - Higher Education Sabbaticals) would standardize regulations for Colorado universities by requiring all state school sabbaticals to be approved by the university system's board of regents, never simply by a department head. "Professors would have to explain how their sabbatical study was going to be advantageous to the broader community," he said.

"It sounds like a good bill," says Martin Anderson, a senior fellow at the Hoover Institution, a conservative think tank. "They ought to think about prohibiting it for professors until they work a certain number of hours. If you have a professor who's only teaching one course per year, that is not a tiresome (workload)."

Anderson says lackadaisical instructors work too little and grade too easily. "At Stanford, 89 percent of the grades are A's or B's," he said.

However, Daniel Ritchie, chancellor of the University of Denver, is a staunch defender of sabbaticals. "It isn't a chance to go to the Sorbonne and have a fling," he says. "A good learner is a good teacher."

Should Grampsas' law pass, the University of Denver wouldn't be affected since the school is private. At the University of Denver, a professor can take a quarter off at full salary, two quarters at half salary, and a full year at one-fourth pay.

Sabbaticals have a long tradition, dating back to Harvard University in 1810, Ritchie points out. The word has roots in Greek and Latin, connoting sabbath or seventh. It is usually in the seventh year at the university that a professor is eligible for a sabbatical.

Professors say a sabbatical is not fun and games; it's a rigorous investment of time and energy in order to further research in particular areas.

Still, some detractors see sabbaticals as being used too often as a lucrative perk. "Part of a contract a professor makes when he signs up is take a year off to refresh yourself. This grand tradition was born when professors were working 10, 12 hours a week, so they didn't have blocks of time for research," Anderson says.

If sabbaticals are old-fashioned, then some of America's top industries are going back to the future, counters Ritchie, who says American business has realized the value of giving employees time off for personal and professional enrichment that often translates into greater productivity at work. "Fourteen percent of U.S. corporations offer sabbaticals - AT&T, American Express, Bank of America," Ritchie says.

He acknowledges sabbaticals can be abused, though, and admits this sudden political pecking at the ivory tower isn't all bad. "As a result of this, there will be greater accountability for how they're used. But there isn't going to be the abolition of them anywhere."

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

Student Gets Life

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. - A former college student was sentenced to life in prison without parole for killing two people and wounding four others in a shooting spree that he said was divinely inspired.

Wayne Lo, 19, was convicted Feb. 3 of murder, attempted murder and assault in the 1992 rampage at Simon's Rock College of Bard. Defense lawyers contended Lo was schizophrenic and believed God had told him to cleanse the campus of lying, drug abuse and homosexuality.

Lo, a native of Billings, Mont., had been a gifted violinist at the time of the shootings in Great Barrington, Mass. Simon's Rock College enrolls exceptional students of high school age.

His father testified at trial that Lo believed there were too many sins on campus and that God had chosen him to correct the situation.

Olympics For Credit?

WASHINGTON - A group of 20 George Washington University students plan to travel this month to Lillehammer, Norway to study the 1994 Winter Olympic Games.

The trip is the highlight of a credit course, "Analysis of the Organization and Impact of the 1994 Winter Olympic Games," which gives students a theoretical and practical overview of the management and marketing of a huge international sporting event.

While in Norway, student will study and analyze the social, political and economic issues that influence decisions about the Olympic Games. The course includes daily lectures, group discussions, guest speakers and public interviews.

Stanford Begins Work Program

STANFORD, Calif. - In an effort to make community service accessible to all students, Stanford University has begun a paid work-study program for community service positions.

A participant in the program, Heidi Gilman, said the program has given her the opportunity to work in a field that she enjoys without having to worry about finances. Gilman, a linguistics major, is now teaching adults to read at a local public library. Before the program existed, she filed forms at the university's library.

A provision in the 1992 Higher Education Act requires all U.S. colleges receiving federal work-study funds to set aside 5 percent of the money for community service jobs. Although the law will not take effect until spring 1994, Stanford decided to start the program one year early.

So far this year about 60 Stanford students have signed up for the service positions, which pay about $7.40 per hour. The government pays 75 percent of the salaries, Stanford pays 15 percent and the community service agencies pay 10 percent.

Residence Life...

Hall Council Highlights

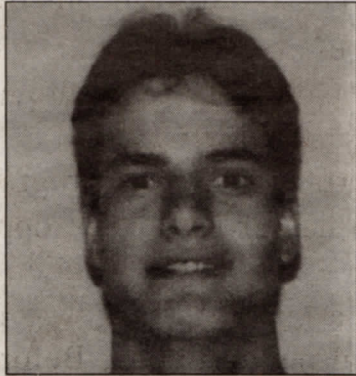

Residents who take the initiative to make campus life better for you!

Josh Connell

Last week we reported that Leitch Hall was getting condoms in their vending machine just in time for national condom week.

The two behind the addition to the vending machines are Leitch Hall council's President, Paul Quigley, and treasurer, Josh Connell. Josh thought up the idea after remember the orientation program, "Cocktails and Condoms", and wondered why condoms weren't more available in the halls. Paul asked the vending machine's company if they could supply condoms. Woburn Vending replied that they usually stock condoms but they needed permission before the item could be stocked. Paul met with Dean Duggin of University Life and Donna Tabloski of the housing authority to ask for permission. Once approved, Paul pushed for the condoms to be in the machine by national condom week.

Both gentlemen are active members of their hall council, and this is just one example of the fine work they do.

A Note From the Wellness Committee...

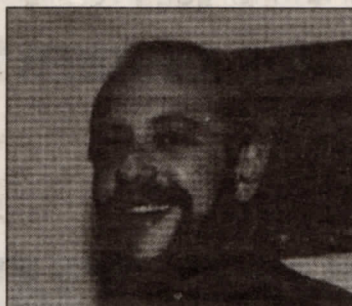

The members of the Health and Wellness Committee met with ARA food services last week to taste test some of their new creations. They are planning on introducing vegetarian alternatives to their meal services in response to student concerns over the issue. We found the test dishes delicious as well as low in calories, fat, and cholesterol. We hope that you find the dishes as tasty as we did and that the campus residents benefit from an increased variety of food.

DONAHUE HALL CELEBRATES BLACK HISTORY

Nationally February is designated Black History Month. In Donahue Hall several staff members have coordinated a month long program to celebrate the the history and many contributions of African Americans.

John Baglio, Sue Casey, Israel Collazo, and Pia Santelices have created a series of trivia questions, one of which is read over the building PA system every day during February.

The resident who collects the most correct answers will be awarded a valuable prize. Response so far has great and even those who are not getting correct answers are learning a little something new each night.

Staff Spotlight

Another team here at the university that goes the extra mile for the students

Joan Donaghey

Tammy Millette

Lisa Gagnon

Hello avid readers. This week on Staff Spotlight, we have the honor of presenting to you the staff of the Office of University Life in Cumnock Hall. These wonderful ladies handle all the business that goes on at this busy office which is actually three offices in one. It serves as the Office of University Life, Office of Residence Life, and the Office of the Dean of Students. The secretaries work for Leo King, the Associate Vice Chancellor for University Life, Dean Ellen Duggan, the Associate Dean of Students, and Dean Thomas Taylor, the Assistant Dean of Students. Next time you have any question about life here at UML, just drop by to see Joan, Lisa, or Tammy, who will always answer them with a smile.

Joan Donaghey has been working here at the university for fourteen years now, most of them at this office, but originally in the Admissions Office. She has four children, three boys and one daughter, Beth who also works at the university in Admissions. She is a widow, whose husband was the golf coach here at UML. She is also a resident of Lowell and is very involved with the Lowell community. Some of her hobbies include rug-hooking, attending the Merrimack Repertory Theater, and walking regularly along the Merrimack in the nice weather. Some of the things that she likes about working here is the diversity of the students that come here and the students themselves.

Tammy Millette is also a Lowell resident and very involved with the the university. She has worked here at OUL for the last three years and worked down in Continuing Education for four years before coming here. She is one of the Chiefs Hockey team's biggest fans and you can always catch her at the games cheering for them. Tammy also donates a lot of time to the Sojourn, the university yearbook, in an effort to make it the best it can be. She also enjoys quilting and comments that there are too many people here at the university having babies for her to keep up making quilts for. What Tammy enjoys the most about working here is also the students.

Lisa Gagnon has worked in OUL for the past seven years. She is a Methuen resident whose interests include sewing, quilting, reading, and travelling. Most interestingly, she travels the country with her husband Glenn and visits the baseball parks of the major league teams. Last year, they travelled to California and went to games at the five big parks they have. This summer, she hopes to go to Minnesota and then to visit Chicago on the way back. Like the other secretaries, she enjoys working with the students the most about her job.

If you know of someone that deserves to be featured in our Staff Spotlight, feel free to drop a note off at the Office of Residence Life in Cumnock Hall. We know that there are many people out there that work hard for the students and we want to show them our appreciation.

Attention All Volunteers

The Office of Community Service is beginning it's annual search for volunteers who are currently serving the University and/or the Community of Greater Lowell.

You may be saying to yourself "I am not a volunteer. I help out at my sisters school once a month but that is not service" or ;you may be saying to yourself "I participated in the Walk for Hunger and Homelessness here in Lowell and helped to clean up the Merrimack River but that does not make me a volunteer." You are wrong! You are a volunteer. You are doing service. You gave (and may still be giving) of yourself and your time for the betterment of those people and places around you. All service big or small deserves recognition. We in the Office of Community Service want to recognize you for your generous efforts. The recognition processes has many parts. Please come by our office in the basement of Cumnock (C-7) to learn more about the process and to pick up a nomination sheet for yourself and/or a friend. You Deserve Recognition.

Campus Ministry Reflections:

"Casino Gambling: Good for the Commonwealth?"

The recent answer from Protestant clergy to the question, "Is casino gambling good for the Commonwealth?" was a resounding, "NO!" On Thursday, February 17, 1994, I was one of over 100 Protestant clergy and religious leaders from across Massachusetts who gathered in Boston for a visit to Beacon Hill. Our purpose was to voice strong opposition to the concept of using casino gambling to fund state projects such as the proposed Boston Megaplex. We convened first at the office of the Episcopal Diocese of Massachusetts (on Tremont Street) for a strategy session. From there it was a short walk to the State House. With one of the legislative hearing rooms as a base of operation, we moved out to various corridors of the State House to share our concerns with selected senators and representatives or their aides. The intent was to have the delegations visit all the senators and as many of the representatives as possible.

The Lowell contingent, of which I was a part, went first to Senator Daniel Leahy's office, where we spoke with his assistants. From there we went to the office of Representative Edward LeLachur, where we spoke with his aide. (We ran out of time to visit Representative John Cox or Representative Steven Panagiotakos.) As we stood or sat, respectively, in the overheated office, we raised the following issues:

- Even if "there will always be gambling", does that mean it's right for the Commonwealth to sanction and sponsor it?
- How might the funds that are spent by the Commonwealth to advertise for its forms of gambling be better spent?
- How much "truth in advertising" is there? In all the ads promoting particular games, is there reference to the fact that in order for there to be a few big winners, there must be many losers?
- How often is there a "Warning: Potentially Harmful to Your Health" label attached, warning people of the realities of gambling addiction?
- What funds would be allotted to pay for the additional costs of police pollution, increased crime, and addiction?
- Is the government in the business of "selling hope" especially to the poor who have the least money for gambling?

At our meetings we made available copies of "Gambling and Government: Some Ethical Concerns / A Statement by Massachusetts Religious Leaders." This document, signed by Protestant and Orthodox religious leaders in the fall of 1993, states: Decisions about public reliance on gambling revenues should be

- 1) How will it affect individuals and their families?
- 2) How will it affect our sense of community—of the common good? and
- 3) What is the proper responsibility of government?

Based on the answers to three fundamental ethical questions:

An afternoon press conference followed the lobbying. The Rev. Bennie E. Whiten, Jr., Minister and President of the Massachusetts Conference of the United Church of Christ, asked, "Will gambling become the 'drug of choice' for a government unwilling to face reality and make hard choices regarding finances?" He noted that concern for our neighbor is integral to our faith. He reminded the audience of the "shadow side of the rosily-painted picture: Gambling can be an addiction for the government as well. Let us unhook the need for a Megaplex from government-sponsored gambling as the means for financing it."

The Rt. Rev. David Johnson, Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Massachusetts, spoke of the "saturation point." When the doors first open in a new gambling complex, there will be an immediate increase in revenues to the state. But within five to ten years, who will be paying the added welfare costs for the many families and individuals who have, in the fever of the moment or as a result of addiction to gambling, over-extended themselves to gain what the odds-makers tell us will never be?"

The Rev. Dr. Linda C. Spoolstra, Executive Minister of the American Baptist Churches of Massachusetts, stated, "All who benefit should pay, rather than manipulate the weakness of some to benefit the gambling powers who then give tips to the government and keep the profits."

Speaking on behalf of the Council of Churches of Greater Springfield, a city that has been discussed as a possible casino site, the Rev. R. Bricker Gibson said, "I am at a loss when it comes to understanding why our state government believes it can adopt short-sighted and cowardly policies, and then expect clergy and churches to 'do their thing' in ministering to the casualties thereof!"

Lowell is one of the proposed sites for the riverboat, or floating, casino. At this time, plans are underway to meet with Senator Leahy and Representative LeLachur in Lowell to express our concerns directly to them. If you are interested in being a part of these meetings, please contact me at my office, Fox 608B, at 454-0683 or x5014. If you would like to read the entire statement by Massachusetts religious leaders, please contact me for a copy of that as well.

What is your opinion? Is casino gambling good for the Commonwealth?

Imogene Stulken,
Protestant Campus Minister

Blue Chips -To bribe or barter

James A. Kimble
Arts & Entertainment

The premise of Blue Chips is based on the strides of a non-consecutive national champion college basketball coach Pete Bell and a test of his morals with regaining a championship team after an embarrassing losing season. Nick Nolte's performance of Coach Bell gives a lot more credit to the writing than it deserves. Coach Bell is a man who finds no reason to comb his hair and oozes with dedication by constantly being decked out in khakis and sneakers, accompanied by a Western University monogram sweater whenever he doesn't have to play the recruiting song and dance man who always wears a sports jacket and conveniently practices a prospects religion.

The topic of the college basketball circuit being corrupt by former university alumni that gives away incentives of cars, houses, and large amounts of cash to play for their former alumnater is worthy of a film being made of it. It's unfortunate that Nolte and Mary O'Donnell who plays his half supporting ex-wife are left with the job of holding the film aloft from its bad script while we're supposed to be dazzled by a few real life college basketball players and former NBA players that were probably meant to bring more reality to the film. You could believe Bob Cousy in the role of Western Universities athletic director as much as you could believe Larry Bird being himself shooting hoops back in French Lick, Indiana, but the number of camera shots where the ball didn't have to leave the screen before entering the basket didn't make up for what the picture didn't have.

Usually when a film contains known film stars in smaller roles it provides a strong base of support that keeps flat characters from being dull. Both Louis Gosset, Jr. as a high school principal harboring a possible WU candidate for point guard and Ed O'Neil as a sports reporter dying to find Coach Bell guilty of breaking the rules by bribing players provide neither support or interest. Also Alfre Woodard who plays a single parent that wants to capitalize on her sons talent in order to get a new house in the suburbs far from the family's former home in the projects and a new job. Her narrow minded role has to be saved by Nolte's cheery recruiting song and dance game he plays whenever he visits the parents of a new prospect. For basketball enthusiasts expecting to see plenty of plays of Shaquille O'Neil and "Penny" Hardaway beating the hell out of the opposing team in a flaming trail of Nike commercial glory as the movie is marketed they will be left sorely disappointed. Nolte's return to moral sense in the films conclusion, which leads to his epiphany after leaving a press conference and beginning to coach a bunch of ten year olds playing outside reaffirms his true love for the performance of the game. Despite the attempt of making this an uplifting scene the disappointing end comes with the raw truth of how athletes material desires become perfectly acceptable incentives in a market where people are bought and sold.

Nick Nolte plays Western Universities basketball coach Pete Bell, who betrays his belief of not offering bribes for recruiting purposes.

Freak Shows—"The Real World," "Reality Bites," and "Ace Ventura"

Ken Provencher
Arts & Entertainment

"Reality Bites" is three episodes of MTV's "The Real World" spliced together with pre-prepared dialogue. It's the most eloquent, and therefore the most traumatic "Real World" ever made. And if that sounds like a recommendation, we truly are in hell.

"The Real World" is an experiment in terror: six or seven twentysomethings of different backgrounds are forced to live in the same house, and the inevitable bickering is photographed and edited as if it involved the most crucial dilemmas of our time. There are two kinds of whining here: the free-for-all group whining, and the private "confessional" whining between a Real Worlder and the camera. The show works because the arguments sound natural and desperate; these people are so mismatched that all they can talk about is themselves. (The most popular word on that show is "I.") Most of them are artists, which is a little depressing. You'll never catch a Real Worlder reading or listening or composing a thought. They nurture neuroses rather than ideas. When they talk they fumble their words—the more heartfelt the words, the harder they are to pronounce. It's sad to watch; as artists, they never seem to be getting anywhere. They're always bullshitting each other and reassuring themselves and getting married. They're like multi-colored, sensitive fish trapped in a slow-motion sea world—tap the glass and they scurry. It's amusing to hear one of them complain that he feels condescended to. How can you get through to him unless you talk like a six-year-old?

What makes the show so appealing and addictive is that it turns the audience into eavesdroppers. The Real Worlders take their problems completely seriously and act as if they alone can feel what they feel. The basic sick joke behind "The Real World" is that none of us gives a damn about their problems—we just like to see them get all worked agrees with them. These aren't twenty-five-year-olds ready to take on the world; these are twenty-five-year-olds who run to their bedrooms and slam the door when they hear something they don't like.

If you think it's wrong to laugh at other people's problems, you'd probably hate "The Real World"—or at least say you hate it after watching fifty episodes. People are up. A girl talks about her lesbian roommate with obvious fear; a boy talks out of turn and hears a lecture on selfishness; a harmless prank is interpreted as a date-rape; every show yields a fresh catastrophe. You look at them and think, The poor things. They speak in clichés when they want to be clever and turn away when someone dis-embarrassed to admit how much they enjoy it. I heard a coworker criticize it up and down with such relish I knew she was hooked. Hating "The Real World" is part of its charm, and God, is it hatable! I hate it because the producers care as little about these kids as we do. (They must have drooled over the date-rape footage.) I'm sure the cast is paid well, but I'm not sure they know their lives are fodder for voyeurs. Their stupidity is pure entertainment—there's real disaster in the air. Like James Stewart in "Rear Window," I can't wait for these idiots to start killing each other.

There's nothing blatantly awful about "Reality Bites"; it has some smart dialogue and looks like the work of adults. Best of all, it has "Real World" fascination without the voyeurism—laughing at a fiction isn't quite as unseemly. The premise, though, is the same: How can a college graduate survive in the 90's without knowing who he is? Winona Ryder has to choose between Ben Stiller and Ethan Hawke: sleek TV producer, sarcastic layabout. She makes documentaries about her roommates, which is a sign, I guess, of her honesty and integrity. When the producer takes an interest in them as a commercial product for the MTV crowd, she's appalled by his insensitivity. (But what else can he do with such lame camera subjects?) The producer tests her loyalty with his quickfooted scheming, and the cynic taunts her with his highhanded judgment calls. Meanwhile we want to know what these two men see in her. She isn't funny or smart or controlled—she can't even play the job interview game of answering oblique questions sharply and confidently. A newspaper editor asks her to define irony, and for a moment she looks completely bewildered.

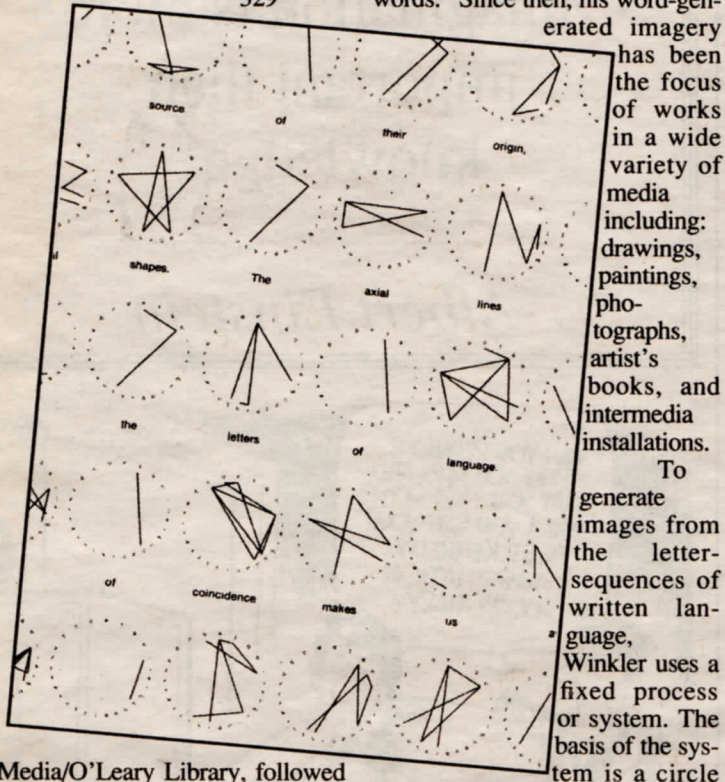

I don't think her flakiness is meant to be insulted; when she finally makes her choice, the music soars and the victor sighs, as if coming to the end of a long-distance run. Winona Ryder looks lovely, but she's in danger of becoming the next Teresa Wright if she doesn't stop hugging herself. When Ryder falls in love, nothing's changed about her—the lines are dif-

Paintings and mixed media works based on the spelling of words

Michael Winkler will give a slide lecture on his work at 2:15 on Wednesday, March 2 in room 329

Media/O'Leary Library, followed by an opening reception for the artist as well as an artists discussion at 3:00 - 5:00 p.m. in the Gallery 410.

For over a decade, Michael Winkler has been producing art based on visualizations of written language. Oddly enough, he started out, not as a visual artist, but as a composer. In the late '70s Winkler was director of the electronic music studio at AND/OR, a contemporary art center which operated in Seattle until 1982. His visual exploration of language began while he was developing a musical composition involving text sounds. Quite by accident, he discovered some "surprising designs encoded in the spelling of words." Since then, his word-generated imagery has been the focus of works in a wide variety of media including: drawings, paintings, photographs, artist's books, and intermedia installations.

The Gallery 410 exhibition will include paintings and artist's books. Michael Winkler has been exhibited widely in the United States and in Belgium, Germany, and Hungary. He is a 1985 recipient of a National Endowment for the Arts fellowship grant and he is represented in the collections of the Museum of Modern Art, N.Y., Stanford University and Staatsgalerie, Stuttgart, Germany.

Gallery 410 is located on the fourth floor of the McGauvran Student Center on Wilder Street, South Campus, Lowell, Massachusetts. The Gallery is open Tuesday and Thursday, 10:00-12:00 a.m. and Wednesday 12:00-3:00 p.m. and by appointment. For additional information contact: Jim Coates, Art Department, College of Fine Arts, South Campus, University of Massachusetts Lowell, Lowell, MA 01854 or call 508 934-3850.

Michael Winkler: Word-Generated Imagery

For over a decade, Michael Winkler has been producing art based on visualizations of written language. Oddly enough, he started out, not as a visual artist, but as a composer—in the late '70's, Winkler was Director of the electronic music studio at AND/OR, a contemporary art center which operated in Seattle until 1982. His visual exploration of language began while he was developing a musical composition involving text-sounds. Quite by accident, he discovered some "surprising designs encoded in the spelling of words." Since then, his word-generated imagery has been the focus of works in a wide variety of media including: drawings, paintings, photographs, artist's books, and intermedia installations.

To generate images from the letter-sequences of written language, Winkler uses a fixed process or system. The basis of the system is a circle of 26 points—each letter of the Roman alphabet has an assigned point-location. The images are formed when lines are inscribed which interconnect the letter-points according to the spelling of words. The alphabetic points were positioned by equally spacing the five regular vowels on the perimeter of a circle, and then, equally ferent, but the delivery stays the same. She smiles, her eyes flutter a bit, and that's it. It doesn't occur to Stiller or Hawke that they're courting a cow.

Movies about young love have never, ever worked because young love itself has never, ever worked. As romantic figures, Ryder and Stiller and Hawke aren't old enough to be interesting. Their relationships are off-the-cuff, without a history. It doesn't seem to matter who ends up with whom, since they'll probably dump each other in a few months anyway. Screenwriter Helen Childress pushes for realism, but it's tough to feel sympathy for people who base their entire existence on whether somebody likes them or not.

I do, however, feel sorry for every actor who had to put up with Jim Carrey on the set of his one-man freak show, "Ace Ventura: Pet Detective." Carrey is the worst kind of stage-hogging farceur: he hoards all the good jokes for himself and leaves the rest of the cast floundering for attention. The director, Tim Shadvic, stages his scenes like puppet theatre—"Punch and Punch." It's a sorry sight: fourth-rate, unemployable actors are served up as stooges for Carrey the Magnificent. Audiences are complimenting them on keeping straight faces, but I doubt Carrey's Woody Woodpecker imitation really needs a sober context. (It doesn't need any context.) It's one thing to laugh at an animal in a cage; it's another to laugh at someone locked in there with it.

spacing the consonants on the arcs between the vowels. To balance the arrangement, the configuration was rotated so that the point for the letter "e," rather than "A," is at the top. The end result is a circular configuration of the alphabet which consists entirely of Golden Proportions and fundamental harmonic ratios (the ratios and proportions commonly found in Nature). It's important to note that early in his musical career, Winkler developed a concept entitled "Geometrisonics," a means of producing visual illustrations of the design of harmonic patterns. Many principles discovered in his visualizations of music, were later applied to written language.

Since he uses a fixed process, Winkler's transformation of spelling constitutes a consistent means of producing visualizations of words in all Romanized languages. He writes as follows:

"Our words for similar things vary from language to language because the forming of our perceptions—and subsequently, the forming of our words—was influenced by social and cultural aspects of the environment. Our various perceptions of the 'same thing' are not identical. Conversely, our conceptions of the meaning of a particular word, although close enough to make communication possible, are also not identical. The sense of a given word's meaning varies slightly with subtle changes in the context of its use—these contextual changes also include our own frame of mind, emotional state, and past associations with uses of the word. Consequently, individual responses to my word-generated images also vary, depending partly on the viewer's personal associations to the word, and partly on their visual responses to the image."

In general, one would expect the images to appear to be nothing more than configurations of randomly inscribed lines; however, most viewer's agree that they are surprisingly meaningful. Perhaps a deeply rooted relationship exists between the two seemingly distinct forms of perception, reading and seeing. The reading of a text can certainly produce mental images, and Winkler is fond of pointing out that we describe our expressions of ideas as in-form-ation.

MC 900 FT. JESUS Signs With American Recordings

Debut album, "Looney Tunes," Due in Mid-Spring

—Press Release

MC 900 FT. JESUS, the enigmatic Dallas-based rapper-poet, a.k.a. Mark Griffin, has signed with American Recordings and will release his debut album for the label, Looney Tunes, later this Spring. Recorded at Planet Dallas studios and produced by Griffin himself, the ambitious new album is a striking progression from the last one, in that it features live instruments than any previous MC 900 FT. JESUS release, including everything from trumpets to tablas.

A skilled trumpet and keyboard player, Griffin also accompanies himself on several tracks on Looney Tunes. "There's still a lot of sampling and beat-box cross-over within a jazz context on the record," notes Griffin. Guest musicians include Living Colour's Vernon Reid, who plays a guitar solo on the song "Stare and Stare," a remake of the Curtis Mayfield classic.

Other tracks on the album include "Gracias Pepe," inspired by a Dia de los Muertos figurine of Griffin's; "New Year's Eve," inspired by the fiction of John Kennedy Toole; and "Buried at Sea," a chilling bit of whimsy that tells the tale of a sailor buried at sea, and his disembodied thoughts as he descends to the bottom of the ocean.

Over the course of his career, Griffin, a conservatory-trained musician, has been hailed by fans and critics for his "sinister outsider view of society" (Alternative Press). He renamed himself MC 900 FT. JESUS after televangelist Oral Robert's bizarre vision of a lofty Christ Tower. American Recording A&R executive Marc Geiger, a long time fan, brought Griffin to the label.

"So much pop music is a boring cliché unless they're beamed into my head by the aliens that live underground." Following the release of Looney Tunes, Griffin will assemble the largest live band of his career and head out on the road.

Jazz Lee Alston's "Love...Never That" Recounts True-Life Murder

—Press Release

On December 27, 1992, singer Jazz Lee Alston's cousin Jacqueline Alexander was shot in the head point-blank allegedly by her estranged husband, Paul Alexander, while her two young children lay asleep in a bedroom down the hall. Jazz Lee, visiting at the time, was in an adjacent

"Love...Never That" will receive sufficient attention so that someone with any information might help lead the homicide detectives to the location and capture of Paul Alexander, who is wanted for questioning.

Currently, Paul Alexander is a fugitive from justice. New York homicide detectives have room. When the gun fired, Jazz Lee ran in to find Jacqueline dead on the floor, her head blown apart by a bullet, her blood splattering the Christmas tree.

"Jackie and I grew up together," says Jazz Lee, "and were like sisters. She was just getting her life turned around when it happened. I wrote the poem because I was mad and needed a way to vent my feelings. I never expected it to go as far as it has."

Jazz Lee dealt with the pain of her cousin's murder by writing the poignant lyrics to the song "Love...Never That," which will be included on her upcoming Rhyme Cartel/American Recordings' debut EP. In the chilling spoken word piece, Alston describes the murder in an understated voice numb with horror. Jazz Lee is hoping that issued a warrant for his arrest on the murder charge, and the FBI has fingered him as a prime suspect in a major gun running ring. The New York Police Department is offering a reward for his capture and conviction, and consider him armed and extremely dangerous.

As one of the few witnesses to the crime, the Bronx-born Alston has been in constant fear for her life. She cut short a burgeoning singing career with her New York-based band Reggaelution, and relocated to an undisclosed city, in part to heal, and also to put some distance between her and the alleged killer. A life-long poet, Jazz Lee found comfort in expressing her feelings through verse. "Love...Never That" takes the point of view of her cousin in recounting the abuse she endured at the hands of her husband.

"Jackie and I grew up together," says Jazz Lee, "and were like sisters. She was just getting her life turned around when it happened. I wrote the poem because I was mad and needed a way to vent my feelings. I never expected it to go as far as it has." Jazz Lee hopes people who hear the record, especially young women, get the pointed message. "Any man who beats a woman, and any woman who lets it happen needs to know, when somebody hurts you, it's wrong."

Anyone with information regarding the whereabouts of Paul Alexander should contact the NYPD's Tipster hotline at 212-577-TIPS. All calls are confidential.

Jazz Lee Alston is currently working on new songs for her debut, which is expected to be released this Spring. She combines a variety of influences, from hip-hop to reggae to jazz, in her eclectic style.

Unarmed & in Danger

Arming the campus police is, or at least should be, a hot topic among students this week. The senseless shooting of a UML student last week has heightened concern for security on and around campus.

Crime and violence are rampant in many sections of Lowell. Problems with drugs, prostitutes and gangs are not fabricated to liven up "Neil & Bob's Top Ten Lists". They are very real problems in the day to day lives of this city's residents.

These problems also affect the UMass Lowell community. There is no fence surrounding our campus...we are not nestled on a hill, isolated from the bad elements of town...there is nothing to prevent potential criminals from wandering unnoticed onto campus.

Commuters (such as myself) often tend to be unaware of these ailments. We are usually home before sunset and the impression we have of campus police may not be a favorable one. They are the ones that give you parking tickets, or won't let you into Fox Hall to see your friends because you don't have the appropriate sticker on your ID.

Well, these are not the officers that will be carrying firearms. The armed officers will be certified and trained at accredited police academies. These officers respond to dangerous situations on and off campus. The perpetrators they are asked to deal with are sometimes armed and dangerous. Sitting in marked cars, wearing blue uniforms, these men and women are open targets for harassment and assault but are armed with nightsticks and walkie-talkies.

There will be an Open Forum to on Tuesday, March 8, 1994 from 3:00 - 5:00pm in O'Leary Library Room 222. Attend this meeting to air any concerns, problems, or questions you might have about this critical issue.

•I'd like to apologize to the many citizens of Lowell that get a bad reputation for the actions of a few. Articles such as this paint a fairly bleak picture of Lowell as a city. Actually, this is not the case. The vast majority of Lowell residents are people proud of the town's history, as well as their own heritage and ethnicity. If any students at UML want to see evidence of this, make your way down to Lowell in July for the annual Folk Festival. Any doubts you might have will be laid to rest.

Arena Angst

After attending a press conference concerning the future of the proposed Arena, I became aware of some very disturbing news. I had heard that in past ordeals with the City of Lowell, the local government had disregarded the needs and wants of the students of the University. I did not want to believe this because I didn't think that it was possible for a city whose only bright spot is a University could turn its back on the University. On Wednesday, February 23rd, this disbelief became a reality.

"It will boost the economy of the downtown area." "The city needs it." These were just a couple of the fallacies that I heard from City officials. Former Senator Paul Tsongas went so far to say that he felt that the entire Arena/Recreation facility should be downtown, rather than on campus where it belongs, and where most of the students want it. He has since "agreed" the the Recreation Facility should be on campus, and that the students make some "good points." Please, don't do us any favors. The reality of this entire project is that the city wants to show that it still has some power. City officials say that through local and state government, they can raise thirty million to fund this arena. Since the city is broke, how can they make such a bold statement? Operating costs of the "downtown arena" would run at least $540,000 (very conservative figure) and where will the city get this money? No one seems to know.

As far as the University is concerned, we will probably have about $15 million dollars. Of that, eleven million will pay for the construction of a new Recreation facility on campus. The remaining four million will pay for a practice facility for the hockey team. This practice facility will be located downtown. In order for the entire Arena/Rec. Center to be on campus would run $18-24 million. Granted the school may not have that money now, I have much more faith in the school being able to raise an additional 3-9 million dollars, than I have with a city operating in the red coming up with thirty million dollars!

The city has made it clear that barring a miracle, this arena will be built on the downtown site. I don't think that the students should stand for this. Our money into the school seem to be the only stable source of revenue in the city; yet our wants and needs are being ignored. Doesn't it seem that it should be the other way around? Shouldn't the city, in fact be begging the University to include them in the project, rather than taking on something that in all likelihood, will further disrupt the City's economy.

The major theme that was stressed at this press conference was that the city and University were finally working as a team. The only teamwork that I can see going on is the school's administration and City officials teaming up to neglect the student needs. I don't believe that students should stand for this, and I encourage you all to tell anyone who will listen, exactly where the arena should go, and also maybe where the downtown officials could go.

Why do bad guys have guns and we don't?

On February 19, 1994, as most of you probably know by now, one of our fellow students, Jamey Beland was shot in the chest. Yes, they arrested someone for the crime, but even if that person is convicted, that doesn't do much for the turmoil that Jamey's friends and family had to endure that night or the feelings they will have to deal with until Jamey is well again. Laurie, hang in there!

I believe I read in the paper that the UMass Lowell Campus Police were using this incident to capitalize on their need for guns (I think not), or should I say weapons? Anyway, this incident does again highlight one of our never ending issues with the University. I believe that SOME of our officers should be able to carry guns at ALL times, but not all of them. I'm not sure of the numbers, but I know some of the officers are academy trained. The proposed plan as of now would be that officers report back to their station (dare I call it that), have their gun issued, provided that person is there to do that, go to wherever they were called (I don't know that that is going to do much for their response time), after they're done, they are to report back to the station and put their gun back. Hopefully there won't be a medical emergency or anything of that nature when they have their gun (they have to return it before they can respond), because of time constraints, someone's really going to end up suffering, and it's usually us, the students. It was also brought to my attention, that most gun incidents occur during excessive handling. I would call the above procedure excessive handling.

Another point brought to my attention was the fact that it's well known that UMass Lowell Campus Police don't have guns. If I were a criminal or troublemaker or whatever you want to say, don't you think that I would choose to frequent a campus like Lowell as opposed to Boston or Amherst? There is really no deterrent here to keep the bad guys away. The above situation, would have happened if UMass Lowell Campus Police carried guns? Who knows? Will we ever have the opportunity to know? I would like to see what would happen to the police statistics if our officers carried guns ALL the time.

This is an issue that needs to be addressed immediately! Let's not let this be another one of those issues that tends to linger around UMass Lowell. There will be a forum to discuss this issue tentatively on Tuesday, March 8 from 3PM-5PM in O'Leary 222. Whether you agree or disagree with this issue, bring your suggestions and show your support.

Life... an Olympic Struggle?

Sometimes it does seem that way. Nothing goes along smoothly, everything we do is a struggle. We go from one class to another, one paper to another, one relationship to another. We are worried about a parent who is ill or a roommate who is partying constantly. We almost have our act together but something happens to set us back a bit. It can seem like trying to ski UP the downhill slope!

I have noticed three different attitudes while watching this year's winter Olympics. Some athletes are there to win and that's all. Nothing else seems to matter. Others have trained hard and long to get to the event and are so happy just to be there participating. They are having the time of their lives. There are others with still another attitude and these interest me most. They are the athletes who are returning to try again. Some have won medals in the past, some have tried and failed, all are trying to stretch their limits and enlarge their possibilities.

When people in this last group are interviewed, I notice that many of them are reflecting on the entire experience, trying to put it in the larger context of their lives. Many are working hard to discover what their priorities are in life. Whether they win or lose, what does it all mean anyway?

Most of us will never get to compete on the level these athletes do but all of us are involved in the search for meaning in our lives. Are we running headlong into life, trying to win at something or are we just having a very good time? Do we bother to reflect, to pray, to seek answers in the context of our faith?

Lent provides a wonderful opportunity to step back a little and look at what we are doing and where we are going. Our fasting can leave us a little bit more free from something to which we might be too attached. It can leave us space to pray and listen to God. Do our priorities and God's match? If not, it's not hopeless. God continually invites us to stretch our spiritual limits and possibilities. And we do not do this alone.

Each time a skater fell I would wince and imagine how bad the person must feel. How do they continue with the rest of the program, knowing they have missed the mark? Because of their discipline, attitude, commitment, and priorities they go on. Because they are not alone but supported by friends, family and coaches. Sometimes a fall can make all the difference in the long run.

It is no less true for us. We fall but are not overcome, we stumble but are able to rise. In our struggle we are not alone. God is with us. During this Lent let us reflect on our priorities, on God's will and ours. Let us find some space in which to get in touch with what is real and important. may God bless us as we try.

Fraternities get bad rap

I am writing in response to all of the negative publicity that fraternities at UMass Lowell are getting. I belong to a fraternity, and even I can't believe what happened. However, there is always the possibility for "out of the ordinary" occurrences. Do you not leave your house for fear of being hit by a car?

It was a tragic act of violence that happened last Friday. Rather than all of the media focusing on the issues, all of the attention was turned to how fraternities cause these incidents. Hello!! Somebody got shot! Focus on the major issues. This was not caused by a fraternity, it came about because the local non-students wanted to get into the party. When the hosts said no, he drew his gun and shot Jamie, all because he was walking up the street. How did fraternities cause this? I don't know either. The campus is stunned by what happened, but campus police, however understaffed, could not have prevented this. All these non-students do is pull their high school pranks, and then start fights. Over the past two months, they are responsible for starting fights with almost all of the fraternities here. Their reason, they could not get into the parties. Wake up, people! Turn your attention to these people who cause the problems, and turn the heat down from the fraternities and sororities. All we do is provide a safe means of stress relief. 98% of all my fraternity parties are well manned, well managed, well structured and safe. The 2% differences occur when non-students try to get in, then cause problems if they can't. I laugh when people talk down about parties, because who hasn't attended a party at college. We are not into the drug scene, or the gun scene. It's just not cool for this stuff to go on in my house.

I am most likely speaking for all the other houses as well. The campus police and administration should try to relax and realize the problem. It's not the students here that cause the car thefts, the drug selling or the shootings. Again, there was nothing the campus police could have done, they can't be everywhere.

Just a note, that this is not a stab at the people of Lowell or the students from Lowell or Dracut. It just targets those people who fell that fighting is a way to gain fame and that guns and drugs are the answer to their problems. Especially those who caused the incident on Friday night. My house is trying to help the community and campus here, but how can we when the community doesn't trust us and the school doesn't want us. We want to mesh in with the community and help out when needed, all you have to do is ask.

Just Thinking...

Some days I can hardly bear to remove myself from my bed. It seems to be that the world just continues, daily, to fill with more and more complicated dilemmas that make my head spin with confusion and frustration. Today happens to be one of those days and marriage happens to be one of those dilemmas. MARRIAGE. This is a word that is supposed to make every woman light up from head to toe with a wide array of positive feelings from anticipation to excitement. Why, then, do I feel like leaping from the nearest cliff whenever I hear it mentioned?

Last night, the last of my closest friends (and the very best of all my friends) was asked by her beau of 6 months for her hand in marriage. Make me puke! Not because I find it nauseating but, rather, because I am the last of the Mohicans, the old maid, the one who can not and will not ever, find the right damn man. I think to myself, "maybe there is something wrong with me. This culture is based primarily on couples. In fact, many people have been married and divorced a handful of times. Why, then, can I not be asked even once?"

I have been with my current boyfriend now for over a year and whenever he even hears the word marriage, a plethora of nerve induced explanations as to why it is not good for him comes flying out of absolutely nowhere. "The time is not right", "I do not have the money for a ring right now", "Neither of us are ready for marriage". I guess that I have just about heard it all by now, every excuse in the book for avoiding that final plunge into long-term commitment. Every excuse, that is except for the real one: that he is not actually sure if this is the "real thing" or if I am the "right one".

What is wrong with this picture? I am relatively attractive, will be graduating in May with a fairly decent education, and I am in love with this man. So, why the, can he not at least have the common decency to be honest with me? It is not as if I am pressuring him, by any means, into marrying me today or even into buying me a $2,000.00 diamond engagement ring. I just want truth, that is it. We are both mature adults with many of the same goals and dreams for the future. The only difference is that I am a she and he is a man.

That only difference makes all the difference in the world. I am a she, therefore I want commitment, a beautiful home, and babies (as well as a good career). But he is a man and, therefore, he has the freedom to roam wherever his loins take him and it is his right to choose exactly when and with whom he will marry. Of course, it is neither his nor my fault that this is the way we live. It is the result of thousands of years of engraved ways of thinking, brought on by all those who lived before us.

I do not quite get it though: it is the man who typically decides when the time is right to settle down. He buys the ring and pops the question when and if he ever feels the urge to do so. It is the man's name that the woman traditionally takes on and it is this same name that is assigned to their children. Hello, but I was always under the impression that the woman does the majority of the work in the child-bearing process.

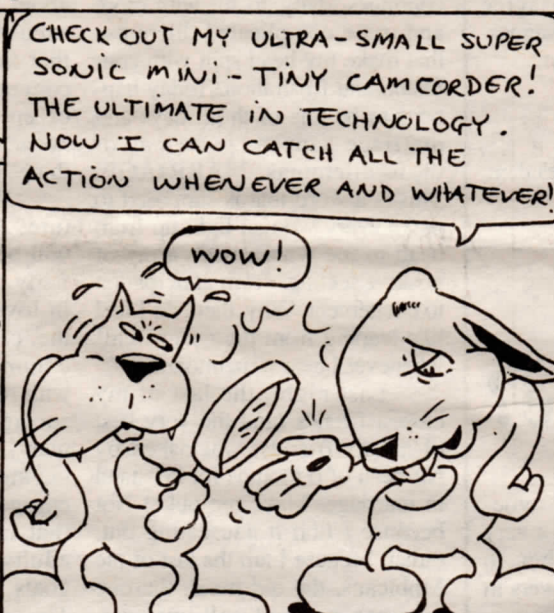

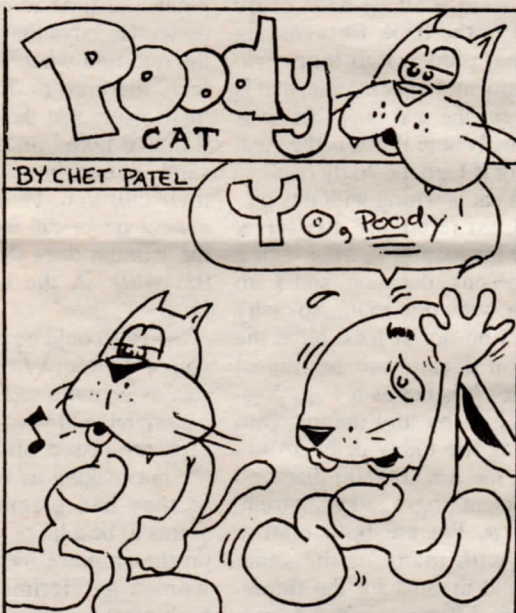

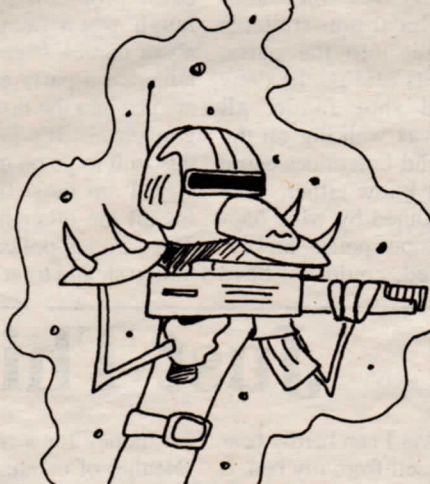

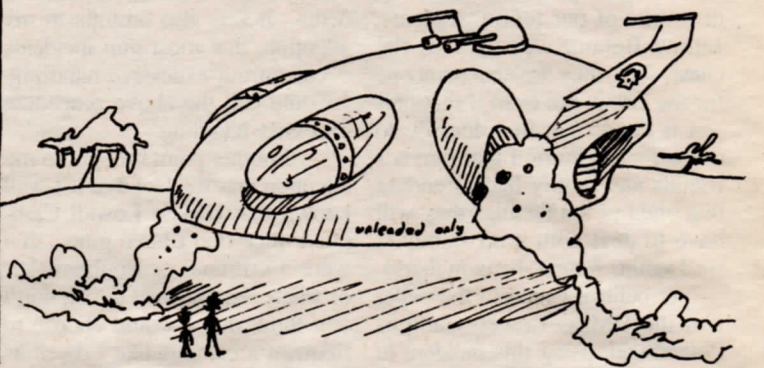

This could be part of the reason why many families in our society continue to function under a patriarch and why militant feminists are pissed off because they are not making as much progress as they had planned to. There seems to be a lot of wasted energy on the empowerment of women, women as victims, and taking back what we deserve. I think that instead of placing blame on everyone else, we need to focus on our own personal responsibility in the socialization process that starts the day that each child is brought into this world. It seems painfully obvious that if a girl grows up with her father's name, dreaming of Prince Charming and waiting for the day when she will be able to take on his name, too, feminism will never have a place in this society.

MASSPIRG's Hunger Cleanup

Spring is around the corner, and soon we will be shedding our winter coats and hats to get outside, enjoy new life and GET ACTIVE! This semester, students involved in MASSPIRG's Hunger Cleanup, planned for April 16th are also coordinating a series of events, fund-raisers and activities to address the problems of hunger and homelessness in and around Lowell. We are also working to reach out to people who need our help. We would like to invite you to join us. You have the choice to volunteer an hour of your time or ten hours. Every little bit counts! Victims of homelessness do not have the luxury to choose warmth over a night in the freezing winter, so get involved. For more information on these activities, please call Andy at 957-3045, or come by the MASSPIRG office for our meetings, Tuesdays at 2:30.

ATTENTION ALL EXERCISE PHYSIOLOGY STUDENTS:

On Tuesday, March 1, at 4:00 in Weed L.H. 3, the Exercise Physiology Club will be having a meeting for the purpose of electing new officers for the coming year. Following the meeting, at 4:30 we will have a guest lecturer, Elizabeth Eagan-Bengston of Brigham & Women's Hospital. She will be speaking to us on the topic of Cardiac Rehabilitation. The topic is interesting and Mrs. Eagan-Bengston is a super speaker so please plan on attending. (Those who are interested in running for an office are reminded that nomination sheets are due to Box #4 at the South S.I.C. by noon on Feb. 28.)

UMASS LOWELL RECYCLES

The Environmental Health & Safety (EHS) dept. and the Society of Env. Scientists (SES) is happy to announce that the UMass Lowell recycling room will be reopened here on North Campus, a staff of volunteers from SES and EHS will be on hand Monday from 9-3 to accept recyclable goods. We encourage students participation in this recycling effort so our university can be credited as a "recycling university." At present, only small amounts of paper & cans are recycled and the hope is to greatly increase this number.

The recycle room is located on the 2nd floor corner between Falmouth & Pasteur (near the College of Marketing Office.) Anyone interested in volunteering should stop by the recycle room, the SES club room, OH 202 or call ext. 6666 and speak with one of the volunteers.

Watch for our weekly updates here in The Connector.

Yes folks, these are just some of the things we have planned for spring semester. What? Not enough? Well, we are planning to see Medea when it comes to the Lowell Auditorium. But feel free to suggest things! For instance, instead of going to The Coffee Mill some Friday night, we could go to a play. Or a poetry slam. And don't forget our journal, the Lowell Pearl. Submit your stuff! Let's have a great semester!

Friars Don't Have A Prayer

UML sweeps Providence... Moves up to #6 in the nation

Sports Information
Press Release

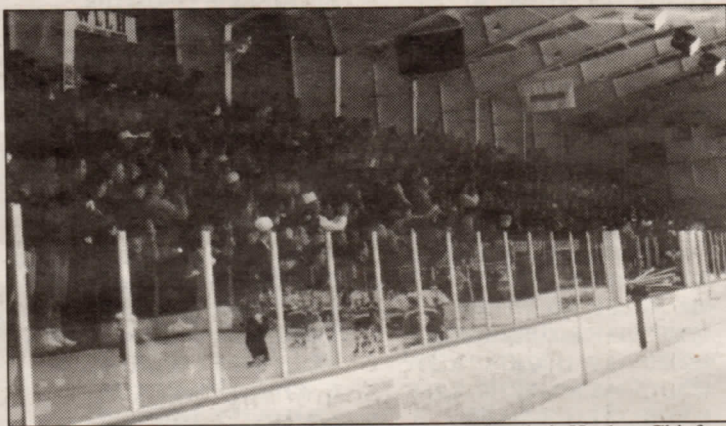

CHIEFS vs. PROVIDENCE:

The Chiefs accomplished something they have not done since the opening weekend of the season—sweep a two-game series. By sweeping the Providence College Friars, the Chiefs clinched a home ice berth in the upcoming HOCKEY EAST playoffs, and moved within one point of league leader Boston University in the battle for the regular season championship.

After a lackluster first period, the Chiefs used a three-goal second period to take control of Friday night's game as senior Norm Bazin and freshmen Greg Bullock each netted two goals. Saturday's game at PC started out the same way as the Chiefs trailed 2-0 after 20 minutes of play. But, the Chiefs got back on their game to tie the game in the second period, and then potted four third period goals (two by Bullock) on the way to their second straight 6-3 win.

In the first game, Bazin opened the scoring at 13:13 with his 10th goal of the season. PC tied the game in the final minute of the period on a goal by Travis Dillabough.

Bullock netted his first goal at 4:39 of the second period while the Chiefs were short-handed. Sophomore Christian Sbrocca made it 3-1 at 6:58. Justin Gould pulled the Friars back within one 52 seconds later, but senior Mike Murray lit the lamp with the Chiefs second shorthanded goal of the period

Tully Forum comes alive with UML fans supporting their Hockey Chiefs. at 16:22.

PC's Brady Kramer got the Friars back within one at 3:47 of the final period. Bazin needed just 29 seconds to restore the Chiefs two-goal lead, and Bullock added an empty net goal at 18:06 for the 6-3 final score. UML senior goalie Dwayne Roloson had 29 saves.

On Saturday, the Chiefs played their poorest period of hockey in the first period and trailed only 2-0 thanks to the work of Roloson (14 saves). The Chiefs scored the only two goals in the second period as each team had 16 shots on goal. Senior Shane Henry got the Chiefs on the board at 6:08 while UML was on the power-play, and Sbrocca tied the game at 7:44.

Bazin continued his outstanding play putting the Chiefs ahead at 1:07 of the third period with his 12th goal. Bullock potted the eventual game winner at 11:31, and added an unassisted goal at 13:26 to make it 5-2. Kramer got one back for the Friars, but junior Aaron Kriss slid home an empty netter in the final minute.

Roloson was brilliant for the Chiefs finishing with 37 saves despite no pre-game warm-up due to a skate problem.

CHIEFS CHATTER: The Chiefs magic number to clinch second place is one. Northeastern trails the Chiefs by five points with each team having three games to play. NU must win all three and the Chiefs lose all three for the Huskies to finish second. If the two were tied, the Chiefs would get second place for winning the season series (2-0-1)...The Chiefs had sole possession of first place in the HOCKEY EAST standings for one day after beating Providence, and B.U. and Maine playing to a 0-0 tie. It marked the latest point in the season that the Chiefs have been in first place since joining HOCKEY EAST...The Chiefs are 3-0-2 in their last five games, 6-1-3 in the last 10, and 9-1-5 since January 9...At this point in the season (31 games), the Chiefs winning percentage (.694) is their best since moving to Division One in 1983.

How about those Olympics! Congrats to Dan Jansen! Classy guy and I couldn't be happier for him. Tonya and Nancy? Who cares! Is figure skating a real sport anyway? How many people are truly disappointed about the USA Hockey Team. After a most unimpressive showing leading up to the medal round, they out did themselves by totally shrinking to Finland. But enough about the Olympics.

Speaking of hockey, though, what are we supposed to believe about these Bruins? Does anyone think that this team has a shot at Lord Stanley's Cup? We all know about their defense but this team needs offense. I don't care where they are in the standings or where they finish the regular season. The real season is the playoffs and nothing else matters. Besides Oates and Neeley, this team is a bunch of grinders and playmakers neither of which produce many goals. When playoff time comes, teams will be double teaming Neeley and making it impossible for Oates to create in any way. More than one person is going to have to produce for the Bruins to have any chance in the playoffs and they don't have the personnel to challenge the NHL elite. Great, they beat the Rangers and so on, but there is no way the Bruins can take them in a seven game series. Someone or some people are going to have to step it up on the offensive end besides Oates and Neeley. If the talent isn't here, then Sinden and Co. should get on the ball and find some snipers. Otherwise it will be another first round, get the golf clubs and have a summer to think about it, defeat.
